Testing Dominance
Additional Comments and Notes: I saw a Fraser Adventure Tour Bus pull up on the beach at Hook Point to get a closer view of a dingo on the beach. It moved up towards the dingo and then got bogged. All the people got out of the car and while the driver was trying to get out of the bog numerous people on the bus were walking up to within three meters of the dingo to gather photos. The dingo kept eating scraps on the beach and wandering around and showed no aggressive behaviour. I drove up and spoke to the driver who had now got out of the bog and said that despite having to deal with the bus being bogged he needed to keep his clients a safe distance away from the dingo. He called all his group back to the bus where he decided to let the group stretch their legs and have a coffee. I saw CTPI 49-Sch4 car 50 meters further up the beach and chatted to him about his project and kept an eye on the dingo which hadn't left the area. The dingo then wandered behind the back of the bus where the drivers tried to scare it off but it would not leave. A father then walked down to the water with his two kids (approx. 5-6 years old) who ran in front of him. The dingo then raced down to the water where the kids were, we yelled out to the Dad and the Dad quickly grabbed his kids. The dingo ran in with its tail up but despite having two seconds with the kids did not make any attempt to bite the kids. The reaction may have been different if the Dad wasn't on the scene as quickly. I spoke to the tour bus driver again about keeping a close eye on his group and suggested that they don't stop at Hook Point again as there were several habituated dingoes in the area. He said they generally don't stop there and it was only because they got bogged that they stopped. He said that the group is informed about the dangers with dingoes and what to go and do if approached but several will still let there kids wander. CTPI 49-Sch4 has footage of incident.

Additional Comments and Notes: When driving down to Coolooloi Creek Camp Zone I saw White Green White, Blue Blue Green and another female tagged dingo sitting on the side of the road. The female tagged dingo wandered into the bush while the other two walked around the car. I got out of the car and they continued to walk around the car but did not show any aggression. They lost interest after a minute and walked into the bush. White Green White and Blue Blue Green came to within 2 meters of me. Some campers who had just set up at Coolooloi said they had seen five dingoes on the track about 30 minutes before hand. They said they were just sitting on the side of the track. I warned them about the dingoes in the area, told them about the best way to behave around them and left them with my telephone number in case they had any problems with dingoes while they were there. I did not see any dingoes for the rest of my time there and did not see any day visitors walking on the beach. Dangerous dingo signs were erected at the barge waiting areas and at Coolooloi Creek. Barge operators were asked to warn clients about the dangerous dingoes in the area.

Curious

Additional Comments and Notes: Travelled down to Hook Pt barge landing and Coolooloi Creek Camp Zone on Thursday to observe dingo activity and found Blue Yellow Green hanging around the Coolooloi. She did not approach me and soon walked off into the bushes. There were people on the beach and she did not approach them either. She hung around on the outskirts of the camp for a few minutes and then wandered off. I talked to people walking on the beach, playing football, and the barge deckhands and they said they hadn't seen any dingoes hanging around. I spent a few more hours in this area, pulling weeds and monitoring dingo activity and saw no dingoes. The next two days I did the same thing and the only report of a dingo I received from anyone was from CTPI 4CTPI who reported seeing a tagged dog when she first started at 11 am on the 23 May and it just sat on the dunes and watched the cars. I did not see any dingoes down there later on that day and there was plenty of people activity. CTPI 4 did not get the colour of the ear tag.

Additional comments and notes: CTPI 49-Sch4 AND CTPI 49-S reported to me that one white white had hung around the outskirts of their camp for two nights. CTPI 49-Sch4 tried to scare it off but had no success but CTPI 49-Sch4 was able to. It did not appear to do anything aggressive but it did sit there and look over them. The same one followed CTPI 49-Sch4 on the beach when he was building oppal. It didn't do anything aggressive, just followed him at a distance. They heard noises around there that when they went to sleep, could of been the same dingo.

Question 8: What does the person(s) involved in the incident believe caused and /or initiated the incident? (Give details)

Attacking and trying to attack there young son (approx. 3 - 4 years old)

Additional comments and notes: CTPI 4 was with his family on the beach in front of Second Valley playing cricket when a dingo with an all blue tag in its right ear trotted up to them. The dingo circled them, jumped back and forth and growled, circled them again and then its hairs went up on its neck and its tail curled over and it numerously growled again and really frightened the family. CTPI 4 said while the dingo circled them it was constantly looking at one of the young boys (3 1/2 years old) who the adults were holding and keeping away from the dingo. They tried to scare off the dingo by yelling at it and chasing it away but it kept coming back and repeating what it had done. The dingo didn't leave until Matt and Lou (rangers) saw it on the beach and put there car in between it and the family and hazed it. The dingo then raced off up the dunes. The family was very concerned for the safety especially for their young boy.
